OF CAPTAIN COOK'S TIME.

Queer Wild Dogs, Cattle, Hogs and Horses of the Kona Pine Lands.

Humphrey B. Kendrick, the California collector of archaeological and other curiosities, who has for many months past been at Kona, in the Sandwich group, is at the Grand. He says the coffee in that region is an immense crop, that to his mind it has the finest flavor in the world, and says there is territory enough there to almost supply the United States with coffee.
One other thing attracted his attention, and made a lasting impression upon him. That was the great number of animals gone wild. These were taken there soon after Navigator Cook's discovery, some wandered away, and now there are immense bands. They comprise wild cattle, wild dogs and wild hogs. He is not certain but the latter have always been there, but if so these and a curious little wild goose, are the only indigenous creatures.
"The wild dogs hunt in packs," he said, "and are exceedingly ferocious. When domestic dogs go wild, they become in time a great deal like wolves. These inhabit the higher mountains, and are so vicious that they will attack men if they are on foot. If they are on horseback they don't usually do it. The dogs are of various colors, and they are pretty good-sized."
"Large numbers of wild cattle are also found in the Pine mountains, that is, up as high in the mountains as the pines grow. They graze up as high as the snow line. I have some friends near Kona engaged in the stock business, and they shoot down a good many of the wild cattle and use the meat for their men. There are vast bands of them. They are very fleet, but they are in good condition most of the time."
"The hogs that so long ago went wild have grown small and run to snout and tusks. They are very savage. In many respects they resemble the peccaries. They attack men with little hesitation. In general hogs do not do well on the island."

ands, though around the towns they have some fine ones of Berkshire blood.
"I lived for many months within six miles of the bay where all the originals of the wild animals were landed in Captain Cook's time. The animals came from England, France and Germany principally.
"Away over south on one of the small islands are large bands of wild horses. I was not in the vicinity of these, but Sam Parker, who is an authority on such matters, told me they were exceedingly plentiful. In places the people have a sort of pony that is a cross of the wild horse and a smaller pony. They are exceedingly fine for riding or driving. I think they are tougher than the mustang."
Mr. Kendrick thinks it will be a master stroke if the United States annexes the islands. He says they are just in shape to begin to be very profitable, and the many curious features, hardly even at this time at all understood, will cause thousands of people to visit them and make their homes there. A good government is all that is needed, he says.—S. F. Examiner.

The Elopement.

She (from the window)—"Is that you, dear?"
He—"Of course."
"Have you the tickets?"
"Yes."
"And the license?"
"Yes."
"Oh, I am so scared! Are you sure those horses won't run away? And—are you sure you'll always love me?"
"Why, darling, I—"
"Oh, of course, you think so now. Is my hat on straight?"
"Looks so from here."
"Have you sent our photos to the newspaper office?"
"I have."
"Very well; I'll be out in a minute, love."—[Indianapolis Journal.]
